

I disagree with leaving the Technician class at only 35 questions. Over the years the requirements for the Technician have dropped from 50 questions and a 5 word per minute code test to 35 questions and no code. I strongly believe it should be put back to 50 questions.

I further believe if the code test for the General test, then there should be at least a group of questions with cypher groups, and the answers to these not multiple choice, but essay type. There should be enough questions concerning rules, technical, and safety that even if they miss all the morse essay questions, they can still pass the General. I further believe that if anyone has passed a CW test since 1987 they should be given full credit and not have to answer the CW essay questions.
